Dear Reader,

Chances are this month is your first visit to Tianjin. If so, we at Business Tianjin magazine cordially welcome you and hope you catch the Olympic spirit that has filled northern China since host nomination in 2001.

The city you see today bears little comparison to itself just seven years ago. In that time, dozens of multinational organizations and state-owned operations have entered Tianjin, boosting its status as the preferred port of the north.

In this issue, we aim to provide you with a comprehensive overview of the traveler's options here in Tianjin. Our feature story covers hotel, conference and office choices for the businessperson on the move. It is supported by interviews with general managers of local five-star hotels. And Last Word uncovers the Astor Hotel Tianjin, home to globally influential visitors throughout modern history.

Be sure to check out our maps and Olympics section, which hold all the key information you need to find your favorite sporting event.

Finally, for those staying through the month, prepare for the World Economic Forum 2008 with our two-page preview in this issue and our feature story next month. The city of Tianjin will host the Switzerland-based Forum in the last weekend of September.

As always, we welcome your input and inquiries. If you are interested in contributing to a future Business Tianjin, or just have questions or comments on an article, please don't hesitate to reach out to us at the contacts on this page.

Violence must be condemned, its cause sorted out

Economic Observer, 14 July 2008

The editorial of China's leading economic and financial daily urged violence be condemned, but consideration given about factors that lead to riots and other forms of "mass disobedience".

It cites recent violent incidents including the stabbing murders of six police in Shanghai and the torching of government buildings in Guizhou and Sha'anxi provinces in response to the deaths of two civilians.

Violence can never be justified, and the causes must be treated in their initial stages, before they escalate.

China's educational system and means of expression may have contributed to "rashness and extreme thinking" because debate, tolerance and constructive thinking are not encouraged, the editorial said. People are taught that "rebellions are a historical rule".

Compromise should be encouraged, and local people given more rights in speech and public participation, to eliminate the potential for backlash.

The political and judicial system require further reforms to become independent, so grievances can be settled fairly and openly.

Yum Boosts Guidance Helped by China Surge

The Wall Street Journal, 16 July 2008

China's hunger for KFC and Pizza Hut helped push up second quarter net income for Yum! Brands by 4%, the Wall Street Journal reported.

Yum, which has had a presence in China since 1987, said same-store sales in the country rose by 14 percent year-on-year. Overall sales increased 43 percent.

The company behind chains such as Taco Bell said net income for the quarter ended June 14 was 224 million USD, against 214 million USD a year earlier.

Yum operates more than 2,200 KFC restaurants across 450 cities in mainland China, generating 25% of the company's profits.

Some 95 units were opened in China in the quarter, against 160 in 20 other countries.

Overseas sales, particularly in China, are considered the main engine for future profits. Company officials have said they expect 70% of Yum's profit will come from outside the US in a decade, compared to 55% now.

Rethinking China's tight monetary policy

Caijing Magazine, 23 July 2008

Premier Wen Jiabao called 2008 "the most difficult year in China". The nation has now reached a critical point where economic planners must decide whether the tight monetary policy in place since December 2007 should be relaxed to prevent an economic downslide before 2009.

Against the backdrop of Beijing's policies that tightened credit and forced banks to raise reserves, China's economic position has worsened since 2007. It's facing weaker external demand tied to financial turmoil and economic slowdowns around the world, combined with soaring prices for energy and other inputs. Winter storms, an earthquake and floods made things worse. Industrial profits fell, the stock market turned bearish, and real estate sales slumped.

"Tighter policy has effectively controlled inflation, and for now economic overheating is not a major threat," said Song Guoqing, a professor at Peking University's China Center for Economic Research. A moderate slowdown is a normal growth fluctuation, he said.

Some experts think that the second half of 2008 should be marked by initiatives that control the nation's money supply, relax price controls and cut tax burdens.

Either a minor or a major makeover for the tight monetary policy in place since December could help China's economy survive – even prosper – during the current global downturn, and into 2009. This has already been a difficult year, as the premier said, and it doesn't have to get worse.

30 years of China & 40 years of Intel

Business Watch Magazine, July 2008

One month after the Wenchuan Earthquake, 69 year-old Intel Chairman Craig Barrett scheduled Sichuan as the first stop of his 14th China visit. He said Intel will fully support post-quake relief work. Intel is going to launch its "iWorld" Project in Sichuan, an effort focused on rebuilding and restoring services in areas devastated by the recent quake. The project will place heavy emphasis on getting students back into school by establishing 200 state-of-the-art e-classrooms, and extending Intel education programs to schools across eight severely-affected counties in Sichuan Province.

Meanwhile, Wang Qishan, Vice Premier of the State Council, spoke in Washington. "China is in a fast-changing period because Chinese reflected on the closed-door policy," Wang said.

On the 30th anniversary of China's reform and opening-up policy, few multinationals can understand the Premier's words better than Intel. The GM of Intel Greater China, Mr. Yang Xu, said the first 10 years of Intel in China were "groping and fitting", the second 10 years "high speed increasing with the industry" and gradually grasping the ropes.

That was 20 years ago, totaling 40 for Intel in China. In that time, the company has grown from a small memory chip maker to the world's leading microprocessor manufacturer. During the same period, China has surged from widespread poverty to a global economic powerhouse.

These two sparkling success stories of the reform and opening-up policy have inevitably arrived together.

Currency report – August 2008

By Paris Lord

The Yuan stood at 6.82 per USD on 22 July, Bloomberg reported, adding the currency has advanced 7% against the greenback so far this year.

Currency performance since CNY revaluation in Q2 2005.

The previous day marked the third anniversary since China removed the Renminbi's peg of 8.27 to the dollar. Since the removal, it has gained 21%, including 2.5% in the three months to mid-July.

Analysts believe the Central Government will focus more on stemming inflation than trying to cool China's exports. The economy expanded by 10.1% in the second quarter from a year earlier.

From December 2007 through March 2008, the currency appreciated by an average annual pace of 17%, something UBS currency strategist Nizam Idris said could not be sustained because of speculative inflows.

"Between April to the middle of May, the currency stagnated, and then we got a bit more appreciation from mid-May to the 6.82 in July," he told Business Tianjin.

Idris said the People's Bank of China will need the currency to continue to appreciate for a range of reasons, including capping inflation, which rose by 7.1% year-on-year in June.

"One of the clearest drivers of money growth is the large trade surplus," said Idris, "and by allowing the currency to appreciate faster, you should expect a slow down, imports to pick up and trade surplus to narrow."

HSBC believes the Yuan is undervalued and that "hot money" inflows are inflating China's foreign exchange reserves, which rose by 280.6 billion USD in the first half of 2008 to 1.8 trillion USD in June.

New rules by the State Administration of Foreign Exchange took effect in July 2008 compelling exporters to put foreign-currency income in designated accounts. The move will allow the administration to check the authenticity of the money and approve its conversion.

The China International Corp in Beijing was quoted by Bloomberg as saying the Yuan will appreciate to 6.50 a dollar by year's end. Bank of China forecasts 6.65 a dollar over the same period, an estimate also given by Idris of UBS.

Inflation & GDP 2008

By Paris Lord

Inflation in June continues to decline

China's inflation in June grew 7.1% year-on-year, down from 7.7% posted in May. The Consumer Price Index stood at 7.9% for the first half of 2008. The central government's set a goal of 4.8% for the full year, yet fears remain that oil, electricity and other costs will increase inflationary pressure.

Among the pressure factors are possible electricity shortages, in part because the central government has so far refused to let power companies pass their cost increases on to residential customers. Food prices in June also rose by a drastic 20.4% year-on-year.

Analysts say inflation still remains China's main economic problem, with the economy growing by 10.1% in Q2. Goldman Sachs researchers have said China's inflation outlook "hinges on the capability of the central bank to keep broad money supply in check".

In June the People's Bank of China increased the reserve requirement ratio for banks to a record 17.5% of deposits. Goldman Sachs also believes the central government will maintain its "tight" monetary policy, which should sustain the recent declines in the CPI from the 12-year high of 8.7% in February.

On 20 July, Premier Wen Jiabao said a "sense of urgency" is needed to control inflation and meet the government's target.

GDP growth slows to 10.1% in Q2

China's Gross Domestic Product growth slowed again in the second quarter, to 10.1% from a year earlier. Rising prices, lagging rural incomes, decreased agricultural production and global financial uncertainties contributed to the slower rate than last quarter, the National Bureau of Statistics (NBS) said.

The economy grew by 10.4% year-on-year in the first half of 2008. The government's target is 8% for the full year. In 2007 the economy grew by 11.9%, against 11.6% in 2006.

NBS chief economist Yao Jingyuan said, "The cooling of GDP growth indicated the government's macro-economic policy to prevent the economy from overheating has paid off." Other economists said they expect the Central Government will make adjustments to existing policies, rather than replace its "tight" monetary policy in place for this year.

Some observers said the reduced GDP growth was due to a decline in exports. June exports rose 17.7% year-on-year, compared to 28.1% in May. China's trade surplus stood at 21.4 billion USD in June, up from 20.2 billion in May.

Demand from the United States is likely to weaken for the rest of the year as the world's largest economy continues to contract, leading some Chinese exporters to expand their sales in the European Union and Japan.

Analysis of the Development of Environmental Policies and their Impact on Foreign-Invested Enterprises in China

Tingting Li

Hana Wang

Rising voices for sustainable development and efforts to protect the environment from serious pollution caused by a fast growing economy have been impelling China to substantially change its environmental policies.

Policies favoring environment-friendly industries have been adopted and are changing the approach towards foreign investment and exercising an unquestionable impact on operations of foreign-invested enterprises in China with respect to matters such as industry admittance, tax and financial treatment, and regulatory compliance.

I. MAIN LEGAL DEVELOPMENTS

With the recent legal developments, a more “environmentally aware” legal system has been put up in order to cover the environmental control throughout establishment and during operation of foreign-invested enterprises in China.

1.1 Industry Admittance

Environmental protection in the operation of businesses has been emphasized by the National Development and Reform Commission (NDRC) in the 11th Five Year Plan on Foreign Capital Utilization (November 2006), by the State Council in the Circular on Comprehensive Working Plan relating to Energy Conservation and Emission Reduction (23 May 2007), and in the State Middle & Long-term Development Plan for Renewable Energy Resources (August 2007), which have given clear signals that China is moving to prioritizing the quantity of foreign direct investment over the quantity thereof as before. China should now become more interested in attracting foreign direct investment focusing on ecology and environmental protection, as well as on the conservation and comprehensive use of resources.

Recently enacted laws also follow these guidelines and policies. Consequently, projects of recycling, waste utilization and clean production, as well as research and development of technologies for conservation of resources and emission reduction, will be more easily approved in China. On the other hand, it is expected that projects with hazardous potential for the environment will most likely be rejected or restricted by Chinese authorities.

1.2 Preferential Tax Treatments

China has been granting certain preferential tax treatment for environment-friendly enterprises in what concerns value-added tax and import and export duties. Presently, the Chinese government has intensified preferential tax treatment to such enterprises by including specific provisions in the new PRC Enterprise Income Tax Law (1 January 2008).

1.3 More Specific Criteria and Explicit Penalties

The criteria regarding environmental protection in China were far from complete in the past and varied from city to city. Moreover, the enforcement of such criteria was mostly carried out in the form of post-supervision rather than as a precautionary measure.

This scenario is currently undergoing substantial changes. With the recent review and promulgation of several laws and regulations focusing on environment protection, such as the Water Pollution Preven- tion Law, the Energy Conservation Law and the Administrative Measures Regarding the Prevention and Control of Environment Pollution by Electronic Wastes, more stringent criteria have been set forth and explicit penalties for non-compliance have been laid down. Together with already existing laws, such as the Renewable Energy Law and the Cleaner Production Promotion Law, a relatively complete legal system has been put up, containing more restrictions and setting forth a stricter control over enterprises' daily operations with regard to environmental protection.

In addition to the aforementioned legal developments, five detailed catalogues specifying projects or equipments to be regarded as environment-friendly and to enjoy preferential tax treatment under PRC Enterprise Income Tax Law are expected to be issued shortly. The promulgation of additional laws on environmental protection, such as the Resource Law and the Recycling Economic Law, is also under intense discussion.

II. IMPACT ON BUSINESS OPERATIONS IN CHINA

The pursuit of environmental protection, on one hand, enables China to put up better conditions for foreign direct investment in environmental protection-related projects, by loosening industry access requirements as well as granting tax and financial preferential treatment to such projects; on the other hand, further obstacles are being created for projects which are potentially harmful to the environment.

2.1 Industry Admittance under the Catalogue

The Foreign Investment Industrial Guidance Catalogue (the "Catalogue") provides the general control guidelines for foreign direct investment in China. It divides industries into "encouraged", "restricted" and "prohibited" categories.

The Catalogue was reviewed and amended by the NDRC in late 2007. Compared to the 2004 edition of the Catalogue, the most recent edition includes an increased number of environmental projects in the “encouraged” category. These projects are now expected to be subject to less approval procedures and to encounter fewer obstacles in getting approval from the relevant authorities. Project examples include:

- ◆ manufacturing of products with new technologies conserving resources, reducing emissions of waste or noise, or recycling waste;
- ◆ production and supply of power and water by using new energy sources or through comprehensive use of seawater;
- ◆ construction and operation of ecological environment protection projects, and sewage and garbage treatment plants;
- ◆ provision of consultancy services regarding environmental protection;
- ◆ scientific research on technologies of biomass energy resources, renewal and comprehensive use of resources; and
- ◆ development and application of new technologies increasing the utilization rate of mine tailings and restoring mine ecologies.

Meanwhile, more potentially hazardous projects have been classified as “prohibited” in the 2007 edition of the Catalogue. For instance, it is currently impossible for foreign investors to engage in the exploitation and processing of radioactive mineral products, as well as in the manufacturing of batteries with environment-harming materials.

Enterprises engaged in environmental projects may enjoy a 3-year enterprise income tax exemption followed by a 3-year period of 50% reduction for income arising from qualified projects focusing on environmental protection and energy and water conservation.

2.2 Preferential Treatment under the PRC Enterprise Income Tax Law

In addition to easier industry admittance, environment-friendly investments may also enjoy preferential tax treatment under the recently enacted PRC Enterprise Income Tax Law.

The PRC Enterprise Income Tax Law and its implementation rules set forth that enterprises engaged in environmental projects may enjoy a 3-year enterprise income tax exemption followed by a 3-year period of 50% reduction for income arising from qualified projects focusing on environmental protection and energy and water conservation.

Enterprises with their own intellectual property rights relating to energy saving and conservation technologies and which fulfill all requirements specified in the Administrative Rules on the Recognition of High and New Technology Enterprises, are entitled to apply for recognition as high and new technology enterprises and, as a result, enjoy a preferential enterprise income tax rate of 15%, instead of the general unified rate of 25%.

Furthermore, 10% of the investment costs on equipments for the enhancement of environmental protection may be credited against the enterprise income tax payable in the current year; if not fully used, the remaining balance may be carried forward to the following 5 tax years. Three Catalogues of Enterprise Income Tax Incentive of Specialized Equipments - for Environmental Protection, Water Conservation or Energy Usage Reduction, and Production Safety - are expected to be promulgated for the implementation of these incentives.

Moreover, 10% of the revenue derived from the sale of non-restricted and non-prohibited manufactured products which meet relevant national and industrial standards may be deducted for enterprise income tax purposes, provided that raw materials contained in the Enterprise Income Tax Incentive Catalogue for Comprehensive Utilization of Resources (yet to be promulgated) have been used for the manufacturing of such products.

Finally, enterprises that incur research and development expenses on the development of new technologies, new products or new production techniques are allowed (i) a deduction of 50% in addition to the actual deduction of the expenses, in case the expenses are not capitalized as intangible assets but charged to the income statement of the current period, or (ii) to use 150% of the actual costs for amortisation purposes, if the expenses are capitalised as intangible assets.

2.3 “Green Credit”

According to the Opinions on Executing Environmental Regulations and Preventing Credit Risks, jointly issued by the State Environmental Protection Administration, the People’s Bank of China and the China Banking Regulatory Commission (12 July 2007), commercial banks in China are required to check the fulfillment of environmental policies and requirements when lending funds to enterprises, and must support “encouraged” projects by simplifying loan procedures. This policy will lead to comparatively easier granting of loans to environment-friendly enterprises.

Commercial banks in China are required to check the fulfillment of environmental policies and requirements when lending funds to enterprises, and must support “encouraged” projects by simplifying loan procedures.

2.4 Decrease of Support to Export-Oriented Enterprises

The Circular on Decreasing the Tax Refund Rate for Certain Exported Goods (19 June 2007), issued by the State Administration of Taxation, has eliminated or reduced tax refunds for certain products, in particular for those causing high energy consumption, high pollution and resource consumption, such as disposable wooden products, paper products and certain steel or other metal products. This measure has largely affected export-oriented enterprises which manufactured products through high resource and energy consumption or high pollution, since it imposed higher restrictions on export tax refunds.

2.5 Increased Risk of Non-compliance

Previously existing low or unclear penalties were one of the main reasons for which enterprises risked not to comply with environmental rules. Nowadays, with recently enacted environment-related laws and regulations, both the possibility of being regarded as harmful to the environment and the costs of non-compliance have been substantially increased.

Unlawful activities are expected to be easily detected by Chinese authorities. Any greenfield investment, production expansion or launching of new product is subject to prior environmental appraisal. In addition, the State Environmental Protection Administration and its local bureaus are increasingly performing random inspections on business operation. These will increase the possibility of detection of unlawful conducts of enterprises in what concerns environmental matters.

2.6 Risks in case of Merger and Acquisition

Extra attention to environmental matters is recommended in cases of mergers and acquisitions. In addition to unsolved historical environmental issues, special attention must be paid as to whether the technologies, procedures and/or machines and equipments used by the target business fulfill environmental requirements currently in force. Any lack of compliance by the target business could constitute a potential risk and increase the costs of the transaction.

China is adopting policies and regulations favoring environment-friendly enterprises. Foreign direct investment in environmental projects – such as ecology, environmental protection, energy conservation and comprehensive use of resources – may be eligible to access various preferential treatments in what concerns industry admittance, tax and finance, while foreign direct investment in potentially hazardous projects will not be permitted. Moreover, an increasing number of stricter and explicit criteria and penalties regarding environmental protection have been laid down and nowadays represent effective limits to the operations of existing foreign-invested enterprises. Foreign investors must take environmental matters seriously into account in their decision-making processes whether before investing or during the operation of their enterprises in China. ■

Applying for a patent

Volume 7

I heard that your company has recently researched a new technique.

Tāng shū nǐ men gāng sù zui jìn yán jì chū yī xiàng xīn jì shù.

Yes. This new technique can improve the quality of the computers' motherboard by dissipating heat faster.

Shì de. Zhè xiàng xīn jì shù yòng yú gāo jìng diàn nǎo zhǎn bǎn, shǐ diàn nǎo sàn rè gèng kuài.

Have you applied for a patent?

Nǐ men shì nǐ qǐng zhuān lì le ma?

Not yet. You are an expert in this field, and I'd like to consult with you about that.

Hái méi yǒu. Nǐ shì zhè fāng miàn de zhuān jì, zhèng xiǎng zài xún yǎo xià ne!

First, the type of the patent needs to be determined. In China, patent types include patent of invention, of utility model and of design.

Shǒu xiān, xū yào què dìng zhuān lì lèi xíng. Zài zhōng guó, zhuān lì bō kuò fēn míng zhuān lì ; A xiǎo fā míng zhuān lì hé wài guān shè jì zhuān lì.

We should apply for patent of invention for the new technique, shouldn't we?

Wǒ men zhè xiàng xīn de jì shù fāng àn yīng gāi shì nǐ qǐng fā míng zhuān lì, shì ba?

Correct! Then, you have to consider either to entrust a patent agency or to file the application forms yourself.

Duì! Rán hòu nǐ men kǎo lǜ wǐ tuō zhuān lì dài lǐ gōng sī, hái shì zì jǐ zhuān xī shì nǐ qǐng wén jiàn.

What do we need to do if we entrust a patent agency?

Rú guǒ wǐ tuō zhuān lì dài lǐ gōng sī, xū yào zuò shén me?

You need to prepare some basic application materials, sign an entrustment contract with the agency, and submit a patent disclosure form.

Zhǐnèi (yīn gāo) de shì nǐ qǐng zào liào, bàn lǐ wǐ tuō shù xù, zài tí jì yōu fèn jì shù jì o d shù.

What does that disclosure include?

Jì shù jì o d shù de nèi róng bō kuò shén me ne?

It includes name of invention, technical program, and the advantages, characteristics or positive effects of invention compared with the current techniques. In addition, you need to provide an attached drawing to help explain the content of the invention.

Bō kuò fēn míng chuàng zào de míng chēng, jì shù fāng àn, fēn míng chuàng zào yōu xiàn yǒu jì shù xiàng bǐ, sù jù yǒu de yǒu dì nǐng tè diǎn huò zhǐ jì xiàng guāng. Líng wài hái xū tí gōng fù tú bǐng zhǔ shù míng fēn míng chuàng zào de jì shù nèi róng.

What should we submit if we apply by ourselves?

Zì jǐ shì nǐ qǐng de huà dū xū yào tí jì o shén me ne?

Application, description with abstract, and affidavit of claim documents, etc. Do you know to which department we submit those files?

Shì nǐ qǐng shù míng shù jí qí zhǐ yào hé quán lì yōu qiú shù dǐng wén jiàn. Nǐ zhī dao zhè xī wén jiàn tí jì o dào nǎo nǎo ge bù mén ma?

Haha, I know. The State Intellectual Property Office (SIPO).

Hā, zhī dào. Zhōng guó zhī shì chǎn quán jú.

Very professional! After SIPO receives the invention application, it will start a preliminary examination. Within 3 years from the date of application, SIPO will conduct the substantive examination towards the application. If no reason of rejection could be found, it will decide to award the patent and offer the certificate.

Shu de tng zhu n yè. Zh shì ch n quán jú sh u dào zhu n li f míng sh n qng hòu, jin xíng ch bù sh n chá, f míng zhu n li sh n qng zì sh n qng rì q s n nián nèi, zh shì ch n quán jú duì sh n qng jìn xíng shí zhì sh n chá, méi y u f xiàn bó huí l yóu de, ji ng zuò ch shòu y f míng zhu n li quán de jué ding, f g i f míng zhu n li zhèng sh .

It sounds a little bit complicated.

Tng q lái y u d n fù zá.

Wish you a successful application!

Zhù n men sh n qng chéng g ng!
