BUSINESS TIANJIN

China's economy looked to have had its growth slow sharply in April, before new US trade war tariffs took effect, with both industrial production and retail sales growth showing significant declines. The big picture is that China's economy is losing the momentum it gained in the first quarter. China's stimulus measures may be starting to wear off, and the central government had engaged in multiple rounds of rate cuts for banks, encouraging the flow of lending into the economy.
